SUMMER IN NEW ENGLAND

MOUNTAIN, LAKE AND SEASIDE RESORTS TO CHOOSE FROM.

The Green Mountains and the White Mountains Easily Reached by New Yorkers—The Massachusetts Coast and Maine's Cool Woods and Shore. They take you to the top of a mountain, and below you, tumbling off into the far horizon are the green hills. The wind ough the gaps in the ridges and the sound of it mingies with the sound the waters in the glens. You listen is it, and off your mind goes to something you never thought of before in your life. That is a way that the hills have of treat-

The trip down to the level isn't the east pleasant part of the whole business. A good hill climber is said never to run. He takes the ascent step by step, and when comes time he goes down as gingerly as he went up; but the chances are that you can't stand it and off you go from rock to rock, and you wonder why in the world you don't break your legs or twist your ankies. Perhaps you will some ume and then you'll know better; but for the moment it's a case of run, and you're at it for all you're worth.

Probably it's a bad case of intoxication. Mountain tops are strenuous things to partake of after a long diet of taxionbe and subway trains. You'll do anything when once the spirit of the one takes the piace of the other, and so it is that you run the risk of breaking your neck running back down the mountain.

In the hills of Vermont—if you're a good Vermonter you will fight if you hear the Green Mountains called hills—you can look down to the westward and get a glimpse of Champlain. Some of the hills give you miles of its shimmering length. If you're high enough you can look off to the southward, and through the rifts in the mountains you catch the outlines of the Berkshires. On the far side of the iske, away off in the distance, are the peaks of the Adirondacks. Of such are the Green Mountains.

Leading north from Bennington is an automobile road which follows a valley as fair as any in the whole Green Mountain region. Manchester is at the exa pack on your back and make the journey afoot there is scarcely a better trip than from Bennington to Manchester, a good day's walk, and then northward two or three days more until you strike Lake

If you are good for twenty-five miles a day in the course of a week you can pick up some of the best hill and dale walking there is in the world. There are good st oping places at Manchester, Arlington, Benaugton and Rutland, and in Vermont are Middletown Springs, Swanton, Lean, Vergennes, Wilmington, Sudbury, odstock, Castleton, Brattelboro, Branand the three lakes, Bomoseen, Dunand St. Catherine.

In the castward of the Green Mounare the White Mountains of New Sampshire and the twin range, the Fran-Mountains. They are similar in daracter, but separated into distinct The two ranges extend from int Monadnock, visible from the Hampshire Hills of Massachusetts and most southerly of the group to the nity of Kcene.

the several gateways into the White Mountains one that is usually taken, es scially if you are approaching from s Boston side, is through the Pemigewasset Valley, which begins at Plymouth, 177 miles from Boston. Those who come by the Boston and Maine follow the course 1 - Merrimack River, pass Squam Lake and lake Winnepesaukee and enter the gewasset at Plymouth.

Prospect, whence you get an idea of what the White Mountains are like from Mount Washington to Mount Wachusett, which lies in Massachusetts, is only five miles from Plymouth, and within we miles of the village are the Livermore

The Flume House and the Profile House The mountain regions of massacrusects. New Hampshire and Vermont are not at a great distance from the shore. If you get tired of the mountains you can change to the ocean and watch the waves come tumbling in against black rocks. The Massachusetts coast offers as picturents matches of seashore as there are in in the Franconia Notch region are accessible by stage, and beyond are some of the other well known places in the White Mountains. Bethlehem is the highest of the New England villages. Its altitude is 1, 21 feet and the dryness of the climate makes it a good place for those to go who are afflicted with hay fever.

delightful diversions. Bathing

You'll enjoy sea bathing at its best at Marthas Vineyard and Nantucket. Because of the close proximity of the Gulf Stream the average temperature of the water is sixty-seven degrees during the Summer-just the right degree for an exhilarating plunge.

Here are splendid, sandy beaches, gently sloping out to deep water. Clean beaches—as clean as a freshly swept floor. Bathing is just delightful here.
